Abstract

The present invention is a process for automated determining whether software packages installed on a target computer are current, and when the software packages are determined not to be current, for obtaining and installing updates, upgrades, and patches as necessary to bring the installed software to a current configuration.

.